

HISTORICAL DATA Although there is documented discussion of the Washington Statue in Council proceedings with regard to location, approval of the statue by the Art Commission, and final placement of the statue, this is the only statue of the four donated to the City of Portland by Dr. Henry Waldo Coe that does not rest upon City property.

A petition of 3,600 citizens presented to Dr. Henry Waldo Coe by Dr. William Youngson, Pastor of Rose City Park Methodist Church, resulted in the placement of the statue at its present location at the intersection of N. E. Alameda and Sandy Boulevard, with subsequent approval of the Art Commission. On April 21, 1926 the City Council granted a request by the Philadelphia Sesquicentennial International Exposition and Dr. Henry Waldo Coe to exhibit the statue of Washington June 1 to December 1, 1926 at the exposition. (Resolution No. 16190) (See Book 81, Page 371 1926 Council Proceedings)

The official dedication of the statue took place July 4, 1927 commemorating the 151st anniversary of the founding of our nation. Dr. William Youngson represented the Coe family at the dedication, and Mayor Baker accepted the statue in behalf of the people of the City of Portland. Wallace McCamant accepted custody of the statue on behalf of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution and Virgil A. Crum, President of the Friendship Masonic Home Association, presented the location site of the statue on behalf of the organization to the City. Dr. Henry Waldo Coe died with the conviction that this statue represented the best likeness of Washington cast in bronze, since he had made a personal study of various Washington statues. The article in the Oregonian July 5, 1927 was used for much of this source information, since no official resolution or ordinance was found pointing up the official responsibility of the City of Portland.

To the Honorable Mayor and Members of the Council, City of Portland, Oregon.

Gentlemen:

At the regular meeting of the Art Commission, Tuesday, August 26, 1924, the formal offer of Dr. Henry Waldo Coe to present to the City of Portland an original bronze statue by Pompeo Coppini of George Washington, referred to the Commission by the Council, was read and discussed. By mutual consent, of the Commission and Dr. Coe, it was agreed that the sketches presented were insufficient for the forming of an opinion of the proposed statue as a work of art and that a decision be withheld until the donor could secure more information. At the earliest possible time, Dr. Coe agreed to present more sketches and photographs of the design to the Commission.

Very Respectfully

GEORGE WASHINGTON STATUE

Description: A bronze life-like statue of George Washington by Pompei Coppini, portraying him as a Colonial gentleman, thus emphasizing the importance of his statesmanship and personality rather than that of a military man. The statue rests upon a granite base 51" wide by 51½" deep by 92" high. The inscription on the east face of base reads as follows:

PLANE WRECK; PILOT UNHURT

MAN STARTING FOR CALIFORNIA FORCED BACK

Plane, Landing on Rough Ground on Kauai Island, Hawaii, Goes to Pieces

ANA, Island of Kauai, Hawaii, July 4. (AP)—The stunt flier of the name, Richard Grace of Hollywood, Cal., crashed to earth in his plane here today shortly after having taken off for the California mainland. Grace and the dog which spanned him were unharmed, but the plane was so badly damaged that the trans-Pacific flight of more than 2400 miles may be abandoned.

Grace made a good take-off at 7:30 A. M. from the rough and rocky barking sands runway, which had previously punctured the tires of his plane's wheels, halting his attempts to fly. He circled the island of Kauai, testing his machine as he sailed but across the Pacific, a terrible accident developed when the plane was over the village of Koloa. A tall tail of the monoplane was seen to wobble and then the plane crashed to earth in thorny bushes on the edge of the flying field. Grace had flown 51 minutes when he crashed to land at 8:15 A. M. The fuselage and one wing were broken and there was other damage, but the propeller and motor were intact.

Grace returned heartbroken to his residence where he had been a resident. His mechanic, Easton B. Smith, completely broke down with grief and was unable to explain the cause of the accident.

"It's my best, and that's all that I can say," Grace said brokenly.

WASHINGTON STATUE FORMALLY DEDICATED

BRONZE UNVEILED WITH APPROPRIATE CEREMONY

Fete at 57th and Sandy Constitutes Fitting Celebration of Fourth of July

"First in war, first in peace and first in the hearts of his countrymen."

This tribute to the "father of his country," spoken soon after his death and extended rather than diminished through the years, was given new meaning to Portland citizens yesterday with the unveiling of the heroic bronze statue of George Washington, gift of the late Dr. Henry Waldo Coe to the city at its permanent site, intersection of Sandy boulevard and East Fifty-seventh street North, in Rosa City Park.

The ceremony constituted an altogether fitting celebration of the nation's 151st anniversary and an invitation to contemplate seriously the heroism of the early patriots who wrested American liberty from a tyrant king. It was a high spot in the city's celebration of the Fourth of July.

Art Work Given City

The dedication of the bronze, the handiwork of Pompei Coppini, added an important sculptured piece to Portland's art treasures—the third of four statues presented to the city by Dr. Coe. It also designated a shrine at which citizens and visitors of the future may pay respect and tribute to an American outstandingly great in character and achievement.

The statue represents at once an individual's and city's memorial to George Washington, commander-in-chief of the American forces in the revolutionary war and first president of the United States. In its bronze lines one may read a tribute to his unselfish devotion to duty, especially in the cause of independence, to his courage, to his sublime hopefulness in the face of defeat, his strength, will, his marvelous in-

SEATTLE, Wash., July 4. In his presidential address, Dr. Francis G. Blair of Springfield, Ill., speaking on "The American Melting Pot," declared the American school system was the "very all" of the melting pot, and the central playground was the "greatest kindergarten of democracy ever conceived."

ence, to his courage, to his sublime his strong will, his marvelous in-

Unveiling Ceremony Held

These were a few outstanding characteristics lauded by speakers who participated in the unveiling ceremony and commended to the youth of the city the example of George Washington by which to pattern their lives. When these virtues are considered, they speak for themselves. If any heroes of history can be placed beside him, for these reasons the statue is destined to be of great inspiration to coming generations, because it will give tangible form to a vague conception of the personality of Washington.

The gift of the statue to Portland was described by Dr. William Wallace Youngson, pastor of Ross City Park Methodist church, who represented the Coe family in making the presentation, as a manifestation of the love of Dr. Coe for art and for his city. The dedication was made in the presence of a large gathering of patriotic societies and residents of the Ross City Park district on the site in front of the Friendship Masonic Home association, donors of the site.

Tribute Paid Dr. Coe.

"We do not have too great a number of men patriotically willing to do for the city what Dr. Coe has done," said Dr. Youngson. "Good citizens such as he are riches of a city. Dr. Coe believed in the idea and also were exhorted to declare the independence of education from political control.

In his presidential address, Dr.
Francis G. Blair of Springfield, Ill., speaking on "The American Melting Pot," declared the American school system was the "very pit" of the melting pot, and the school playground was the "greatest kindergarten of democracy ever conceived."

Suzanne Rape Politician

Dr. Henry Suzzallo, ex-president of the University of Washington, called upon the educators to oppose the movement toward centralization of control in education. He urged that active direction of educational matters be left to the educational profession, much as engineering matters are left to engineers, and health problem left to doctors of medicine.

The general session of the convention was held in Meany hall on the University of Washington campus, where Dr. Suzzallo had presented several papers before his removal as head of the university some months ago. Dr. Suzzallo deplored the control exercised by politicians over higher education.

Chicago Case Demanded

"Education cannot be declared free of partisan politics until the great national profession of educators and the public which understands the true relation of public education to government, has effectively turned its attention to the state control of higher schools and to the municipal control of common schools in some of our larger cities," Dr. Suzzallo said.

"Chicago is an example of a city where the most disgraceful dema-gogy of recent days has dragged the school management through a campaign of misrepresentation which is almost unparalleled. The mayor of the city should have nothing whatever to do with the control of the schools. A special board of education elected directly by the people from a Chicago school district should be charged with their management. There are other less dramatic instances which might be cited."

Free Hand Pleaded For

A plea for a free hand for the profession of education was voiced by Dr. Suzzallo, who spoke on "A Declaration of Independence for the American School System."

Dr. Suzzallo urged the educators to wrest the control of the public school system from politics. There possessions rather than in the idea of getting and holding. Dr. Coe, whom we hold in sacred memory at this hour, was a real philanthropist. "I see thousands of children in the years to come going by this statue and I see the influence of this magnificent bronze likeness of Washington in moulding their lives. I see in this statue an eloquent instrument for shaping the character of the citizens of this city. And as it looks down the Old Oregon trail, the route the pioneers traveled, it will be to this city what the personality of George Washington has been for a century and a half—a sleepless sentinel guarding our free institutions."

The crowning glory of his well-rounded life, Dr. Youngson concluded, was the character that George Washington bequeathed to the world. Accepting the gift, Mayor Baker declared that it gave him great satisfaction to receive on behalf of the people of the city such a wonderful monument to one of the country's honored great. He expressed regret that Dr. Coe might not have been privileged to be there in person to hear and know the appreciation of his fellow citizens.

"On behalf of the people that I represent I accept, therefore, this wonderful gift," said the mayor, "and pass it on to the safe keeping of our citizens. May those in responsible positions see that every wish of the donor in respect to this statue is carried out in the letter and in the spirit." At this point, Henry Waldo Coe, small grandson of the donor, pulled the cord which allowed the flags draped about the bronze to fall away revealing in its majestic beauty the statue of Washington, set at the apex of the triangular plot and facing up Sandy boulevard.

Statue Not Duplicated.

The statue represents the first president as a retired gentleman and southern aristocrat. His poise is perfect and his air of self-confidence is reassuring. His mouth is set firm in the typical Washington style, idealized in the famous paintings by Stuart. He rests gracefully upon his walking stick and carries a cloak over his left arm.

He is dressed not as a soldier but as a colonial gentleman, emphasizing the importance of his statesmanship and personality rather than the military aspect featured in most other Washington statues. It is the only one of its kind, and by agree-various Washington statues and to have concluded that the one in Mexico City by Pompel Coppini was the best. He first asked for a replica of that work, but Coppini informed him that he had something better to submit. And that is how this statue came to be produced.

Dr. Coe saw the statue before his death temporarily placed at the front of the art building at the Sesqui-Centennial exposition in Philadelphia, to which he had lent the bronze. He was greatly pleased with it and died with the conviction that the statue which he was presenting to Portland was the best Washington likeness that had yet been cast in bronze.

Wallace McCamant accepted the custody of the statue on behalf of the national society, Sons of the American Revolution. The Declaration of Independence, signed 151 years ago yesterday, would have been empty rhetoric, he said, without the military genius and statecraft of George Washington. Virgil A. Crum, president of the Friendship Masonic Home association, presented the site of the statue on behalf of the organization to the city.

Delegation Takes Part.

By coincidence a delegation of 110 members of the Shenandoah Valley tourist special was able to participate in the dedication of the statue of the illustrious son of their state.
