

Cameron Browne

Bio:

Cameron (he/him) was born and raised in NE Portland's Cully neighborhood. After attending Oregon State University, he moved back to Portland as a freelance photographer. For the last 20 years he has worked with local and national newspapers, magazines, small and large businesses, non-profits, international corporations, local manufacturers, and sports leagues. A workday could be anything from photographing a Trailblazers game to portraits of the State Treasurer or product photography of a Nike shoe, or a Freightliner truck, or documenting a news event. He gets various looks into the home, work, personal and political lives of people in Portland.

Statement of Interest:

Having seen the racial divisions in Portland (in his lifetime), seeing and hearing the experiences of minority communities while living and working in the community, Cameron is hoping to bring attention to inequalities in policing, the use of force, and systemic problems between police and all marginalized communities.
