WE'VE HAD ENOUGH OF B. K. LAWSON

The job of policeing Portland is a big job. It requires an understanding of human problems, it demands a deep insight into social and economic conditions. The job is one that has no room for a swaggering, officious demeanor, no place for a pretentious prison warden discipline. Portland isn't under military rule—yet—and the position of police chief in the Rose City is still a civilian occupation.

In other words, the job of policeing Portland is too big for Colonel B. K. Lawson!

At no time in the history of Portland has there been more petty trouble than in the past few months. Unreasonable advantages have been taken of downtown motorists; groups of unemployed, exercising their constitutional rights. Insignificant crimes have been exaggerated into offensive mountains and really momentous breaches of the public peace have been conveniently shelved.

Therefore, in the light of the obvious facts, what possible excuse is there for the retention of B. K. Lawson as Portland's chief of police?

The good colonel may be a fine chap—personally. His military strut may command extreme respect from his family and immediate friends. Indeed, the public might go into spasms of merriment were the former warden's studied antics properly filmed, arranged and cast upon the silver screen.

But, as a realistic chief of police, the citizens of Portland are sick and tired of B. K. Lawson.

There are other men at the station capable of handling the job. L. V. Jenkins for years administered the police department and did so in a manner that won the respect and acclamation of the entire city. Jenkins is still available. Why not summon him to again assume the duties of his old command.

Harry Niles is another whose services, in the light of past activities, would be acceptable to Portland's citizenry.

At any rate, Mayor Carson, we've had enough of B. K. Lawson! You presented him to us on a silver platter, we had to accept him and, in the words of J. Wellington Wimpy:

"Thank you—too much!"

A number of the Reserves responded to this and gave reasons why they had wanted to become Reserves and also gave their reasons why they were so regular in their attendance. After a number of the Reserves had spoken Advisor Goldstein arose and made a very fine talk. He advised Col Lawson that he would attempt to answer the question for all of the members. He spoke at great length and it was apparent that he satisfied Col Lawson as to the sincerity of purpose of the members of the Reserves, and of their desire to be of the greatest service to their City and its government. Inasmuch as Col Lawson had intimated that the organization might be political the Secretary then read a motion that had been made and carried at a meeting of some two years previous.
