Joe Mahoney, Citizens in Action, said this declaration and the U.S. Bill of Rights are extremely important and he urged people in leadership positions to reread them.

Gwen Barnard, Church of Scientology, said the church is a spearhead for religious freedom and is happy to join the MHRC in celebrating the anniversary of this document.

Commissioner Francesconi said some of the issues raised in the Declaration need to be dealt with in the City, i.e. the high incarceration rate of African-Americans and Latinos.

Disposition: Resolution No. 35744. (Y-5)

1747

TIME CERTAIN: 9:30 AM - Present Lowenstein Trust Award (Presentation introduced by Commissioner Kafoury)

Discussion: Commissioner Kafoury said it is a pleasure to make this award in honor of the late Steve Lowenstein who was a fighter for human rights. When he died he set up a trust recognizing and rewarding those who have fought for social justice in the community.

Art Alexander, chair of Lowenstein Trust, said this year's award is being presented to Ronnie Harrison for his unstinting work with young people through his Accelerated Music Program. He described Mr. Harrison's program to bring children into the world of music and noted that any child willing to play and practice is invited to participate.

Ronnie Harrison, award recipient, said what he does at times does not seem important but it is very necessary, especially in northeast Portland where people deal with a lot of things after the fact, trying to straighten out kids' lives after they get in trouble. He himself got involved in music through the Albina Arts Center and he sees his music program as an extension of caring.

Chris Hardin, a sophomore at Grant High School, a participant in the Accelerated Music Program, played his saxophone for Council.

Disposition: Placed on File.

Commissioner Charlie Hales

1767

Consider vacating a portion of SW Multnomah Boulevard between SW 40th and SW 45th Avenues, at the request of Leonard Gionet (Hearing; Previous Agenda 1342; C-9943)

Discussion: Don Gardner, Portland Office of Transportation (PDOT), described the vacation process for this public right-of-way which is an easement granted to the public for a transportation purpose. The underlying ownership in this case lies with the abutting property owner. State law allows citizens to apply for a vacation when they believe the right-of-way is no longer needed for a public transportation purpose. PDOT staff recommends granting the vacation as they believe there is no public need for this right-of-way. This is an easement for transportation use and the question is whether there is a transportation need for this piece of land.

Mayor Katz noted that earlier there was some question as to whether this site might be needed by the Bureau of Environmental Services (BES) for storm drainage. As she recalls, BES answered no.

Mr. Gardner said BES looked at the site several times and found it was not appropriate for a storm drainage facility.

Commissioner Francesconi asked what would happen if BES changed its mind in the future.

Mr. Gardner said if the right-of-way was vacated and then a need was found for it, the City would have to acquire it. The site has physical constraints that make it very unlikely BES would ever want to use this as a storm drainage facility.

Marcia Wilder, PDOT staff, said a petition was filed to vacate this portion of SW Multnomah Boulevard. She described the area and noted that City bureaus and the affected agencies reviewed the request to vacate and made no objections. A public hearing was held and since then staff has met with both the petitioner and the neighborhood association. Today they present the same request to vacate.

Mr. Gardner said this odd-shaped area originally was a railroad right-of-way which then reverted back to Multnomah County. He said no one knows exactly how the boundaries were determined but the area requested for the vacation is clearly outside the scope of what would normally be considered as right-of-way. He said there is a steep bank which makes accessibility difficult.

Mayor Katz said the issue raised earlier was using public land for private purposes. She asked what the land will be used for.

Mr. Gardner said this is private land with a public easement for transportation purposes only. If the City has no use for it citizens may apply to extinguish the City's easement rights and get back all the rights to their land.

Yvonne Meekcoms, Gionet Development Company, representing Leonard Gionet, said the land in question is a flat portion of land abutted by a 48-unit apartment complex owned by Mr. Gionet and is overgrown with shrubs and weeds. Several years ago, he called the City to see who took care of the area as it was overgrown and unsightly. The City indicated it did not have the manpower to take care of it and was not interested in doing anything with it. Mr. Gionet then cleaned it up and mowed it. He decided that a vacation was appropriate as it seemed logical to have the strip of property go with the apartment complex. It would be landscaped, perhaps with a picnic area for apartment dwellers. Ms. Meekcoms said she circulated the petition and it took her quite a long time to get the approvals as many of the landowners are absentee. The petition was filed in 1997 and then went through the Planning Commission twice when the stormwater drainage issue was raised. BES examined the property and has determined it is not an appropriate site because of its size and location. Aside from the 50 feet Mr. Gionet has requested, the property goes about 60 feet up to Multnomah Boulevard and down to a ditch which runs behind the property. There is no access except through the driveway of the apartment building. If it is determined, sometime in the future, that curbs or sidewalks are needed on Multnomah Boulevard, sufficient space remains. The neighbors are generally against the vacation because they believe the property can be put to some other use but Ms. Meekcoms said she is at a loss to understand what purpose it serves to keep unused and uncared for property.

Maria Gregory, Multnomah Neighborhood Association, asked for denial of the vacation. She said this 50 by 200-foot parcel is a rectangle, not oddly shaped, that equates to 10,000 square feet on which one could place ten units, if housing is the objective. The neighborhood believes this parcel contributes to City clean water goals as it is in a drainage with an underground stream and springs which drain into Fanno Creek. Across the street is a former pond that is now the Dahl apartments. On the west side there is a small environmental protection zone. The first person who inspected the site for BES proposed denying the requested vacation, and on a second site visit, water was observed bubbling up from the storm drain. BES still has not reached a conclusion as to the cause but the best guess is that there is an overflow problem. She has observed cars, trucks and other vehicles in various states of disrepair on the site and is concerned about oil going into the drains. The neighborhood believes the City should retain this parcel as public property as it could contribute to future mitigation banking or to Endangered Species Act recovery efforts. The neighborhood believes the property is owned by Multnomah County and that means the property is in public ownership. If the City grants the vacation and then finds it needs it later, it would have to buy it back.

Mayor Katz asked who owns the property.

DECEMBER 2, 1998

Mr. Gardner said staff is having trouble chasing down the title but it appears that it went from the railroad to Multnomah County. They are not quite sure whether it went to the County in fee or as a right-of-way.

Jim Peterson, Multnomah Neighborhood Association, submitted documents to the Planning Commission indicating that Multnomah Boulevard is over capacity. PDOT basically refuted that. He said no soils analysis has been done and, as a registered soils technician, he thinks more right-of-way will be needed if they add the bicycle lane and sidewalk everyone wants. He said it is shortsighted for the City to sell this now and called for protecting the property with a conservation easement, as allowed under ORS Section 271.715, until a stormwater analysis for Southwest is completed, which will take years.

Dan LeFebvre, BES, said several Bureau employees have inspected the site and the applicant has provided a survey to show that the current drainage ditch, parallel to Multnomah Boulevard, is not on his site. The property slopes into this drainage ditch and the drainage hits an environmental zone with a lot of standing water before running north through a culvert, eventually reaching Fanno Creek. BES added a condition on the vacation stating that if any development occurs, the entire site would have to meet whatever water quality requirements are in place at the time. Staff believes this would best meet the City's water quality goals.

Commissioner Sten asked if staff has concluded that even though the analysis of Fanno Creek and other areas is not completed it is not likely to see any productive use of this.

Mr. LeFebvre said he does not believe so as most of the analysis is focused on a public facility that would do some good for the water in Fanno Creek. This particular stream goes through two culverts before it gets to any open drainage way and there is no way fish habitat could move up to the site.

Mayor Katz asked what restrictions would there be on this land if it is vacated. Could the owners build eight or ten units?

Mr. Gardner said the owner could do whatever the zoning allows. What is happening now is that people are parking cars here and if the land were in private ownership, the Buildings Bureau would be questioning why there was a parking lot here. There would be better controls under private ownership as the owner would either have to order the cars out or upgrade it for parking, at which point they would have to provide storm water facilities. The owners have agreed to a condition that if they do any work on this site that creates more impervious area, they will go back and do storm water quality work for the entire apartment complex.

Commissioner Sten said it does not look like this property will be used right away and since it is pretty clear the City does not have an adequate plan for storm water in southwest, he is reluctant to give up a right-of-way for no particular benefit to the property owner or neighborhood right now. It seems like the City is giving up an asset for nothing and that it would be prudent to keep the right-of-way until there is some proposed use.

Commissioner Hales said, as he understands it, the burden of proof is not on the owner to prove beneficial use of the property but on the City to explain what public transportation purpose is accomplished by maintaining the right-of-way.

Mr. Gardner said staff's position is that the City has no public transportation use at this time. Council could say there is a potential use and deny the vacation.

Commissioner Hales asked for a legal interpretation.

Harry Auerbach, Deputy City Attorney, said Mr. Gardner is correct in stating that the City has a public transportation right in this right-of-way and if Council determines it has some foreseeable transportation-related use for it in the future, it could retain that right-of-way. The City does not lose that right if it does not improve or develop the property but if it decides there is no public transportation use, the property owner has an opportunity to get the right-of-way vacated and regain full use of the property.

Mayor Katz asked who owns the property today.

Mr. Auerbach said the City owns an interest in the property, which is the right to use the right-of-way for public transportation purposes.

Mayor Katz asked if the owners of the property paid for this piece.

Mr. Gardner said typically right-of-ways are taken or condemned from a piece of property. When vacated, they return to the property from whence they came. The title to this property was obtained by the railroad and when it got rid of the property, Multnomah County took it. The question is whether the County has fee simple title or only a right-of-way interest. That is the next step this applicant will have to work out.

Mayor Katz asked who has title to this piece.

Mr. Auerbach said under Oregon law the property owner owns the ground under the right-of-way to the center line and the public has the right to use the ground for transportation-related purposes.

Commissioner Francesconi asked if the fact that City does not have a need right now but may have at some future point provided sufficient legal grounds to deny the vacation.

Mr. Auerbach said yes, because if the City anticipates that it may need the right-of-way in the future, it may retain it.

DECEMBER 2, 1998

Commissioner Francesconi asked if there was any standard for determining future need.

Mr. Auerbach said that is what Council gets paid for.

Commissioner Francesconi asked Ms. Meekoms why Mr. Gionet wanted this property.

Ms. Meekoms said when they started this process they were told that the property was owned by Multnomah County but the City had to vacate it to the County first and then they would buy it from them. They have to pay market value for the land, once it is vacated. Their initial plan is to landscape it to enhance the apartments and there is no plan to build on it.

Commissioner Francesconi asked her if they would be going through all this just to add the landscaping unless there was a possibility they might build on this someday.

Ms. Meekoms said she does not know if it is feasible to build on it. It is not unusual for them to want this piece as it dead ends in their parking lot and the apartments overlook it. Right now it is a place where people put junk. The zoning is R2.

Commissioner Hales moved to approve the City Engineer's report and ask that he prepare an ordinance. Commissioner Francesconi seconded.

Commissioner Francesconi said he does not hear that there is much probability that the site will be used for either a street or storm water. Also, the developer has agreed to bring the whole site, not just this property, up to storm water standards if this is developed. Finally, there is a public benefit to having the site better maintained. When BES and PDOT say they do not need the property, he does not want to substitute his judgment for theirs.

Commissioner Sten said the property owner is legally required to keep this up and it bothers him that it will not be kept up unless the City gives away the right-of-way. Although this is a close call, he will vote nay as he does not see what the City gains by giving this up now.

Mayor Katz voted no.

TIME CERTAIN: 2:00 PM - Consider Strategic Plan for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention in Multnomah County (Report introduced by Mayor Katz)

Discussion: Elyce Clawson, Director, Strategic Planning Committee, reviewed the process and the guiding principles for developing the strategies. She said the need to work with others and link services to youth needs was clear and there is tremendous support in the community for earlier prevention efforts and there is also a strong need to provide sanctions and accountability programs. It appears that juvenile crime is going down in Multnomah County, perhaps at a greater rate than in other counties. She attributed some of that decrease to the collaborative efforts of the schools and police. Ms. Clawson outlined the continuum of involvement with the juvenile justice system and listed the benchmark goals adopted by the County for measuring success. These include reducing juvenile crime, increasing the percentage of those who complete high school and increasing citizen satisfaction through broader involvement with the community. She noted areas where strategies have already been implemented and their success to date. These include the school attendance initiative, the turnaround school, expansion of after-school programs and an increase in family support services. A youth receiving center has been opened downtown and a case classification system has been implemented to assess the risk of recidivism. Home-based alcohol and drug services are also now being offered and strategies are being developed to work with at-risk youth under 12 years of age. Other steps taken include establishment of a skill development unit, staff training on best practices, increasing data system capacity and the number of evaluations. Ms. Clawson said they hope to obtain State money and target resources to those populations and neighborhoods where they can do significant crime reduction.

Commissioner Kafoury asked how this fits in with the new program for homeless youth.

Ms. Clawson said some homeless youth money is being used for the receiving center and shelter.

DECEMBER 2, 1998

Commissioner Francesconi asked her if she could address the issue of race.

Ms. Clawson said they have observed a lack of hopefulness in some African-American youth and other children of color. When there is hopelessness, social service workers see more violence and there are lots of theories about why that happens. One piece of the strategic plan is an enforcement program targeted to young people up to age 24 who have committed violent crimes or are at risk of doing so. They are also trying to fund more alternatives for at-risk youth. She said they will evaluate the attendance initiative by gender and racial background and then gear special programs to those who are not attending school and work with families to try to get kids back in schools before they commit crimes.

Mayor Katz said she is very concerned about juvenile violence and has begun looking at some of the best practices. She noted that the crime rate is down from prior years and the homicide rate is down 77 percent.

Police Chief Charles Moose commended the County for its excellent plan which the Police Bureau will seek to integrate with its own programs. The most important goal is to have the County work with the Police Bureau in making decisions about individuals. If better decisions can be made about diversion and the Bureau can make better use of County programs, this will help keep young people out of the criminal justice system. He said the bureau will continue to educate its officers about alternatives.

Assistant Police Chief Lynnae Berg said the Youth Gang Anti-violence Team consists of representatives from a number of jurisdictions and is under the command of tactical operations. Since May, 1998 the Task Force has made 83 arrests, with 60 youth falling within the target ages. It also seized 87 guns, mostly semi-automatic hand guns but also assault rifles, hand grenades and other explosive devices. The Team recovered over $30,000 in stolen property and has worked on multi-agency investigations when offenders cross jurisdictional boundaries. It is also conducting long-term investigations into gun trafficking, again involving increased collaboration with metro-wide agencies. Such partnerships are very helpful as many offenders cross jurisdictional lines. They continue to facilitate data-gathering using more advanced technology so that their investigations and deployment of resources is more effective.

Mayor Katz said one piece of the County's plan is enforcement and another is the after-school programs which Commissioner Francesconi has taken under his wing.

Commissioner Francesconi said three youth service centers for kids who are most at risk have been opened and the County has gone a long way to increase cooperation among the jurisdictions, the quality of its data collection and its efforts to involve the community. Most juvenile offenders are not violent and two of every three youths referred to the juvenile system never return again. What remains to be done is to increase efforts to work with the schools and find more employment opportunities for the most at-risk youth.

Carol Aquino, management analyst, Bureau of Parks and Recreation, described her work with ministers from 21 churches, who have now hired a program director to begin implementing some of the strategic plan goals. The ministers take exception to the term "at-risk" youth as they believe all children are at risk. She said the ministers want to focus and identify those kids in the corridors of risk and work with families and the police regarding those youth. They have worked with youths picked up on curfew sweeps and are offering Parks programs to them for free. They will be tracked to see how many actually begin to participate in pro-social activities. The ministers also targeted four areas to emphasize: 1) parental support; 2) mentorship partnerships with other organizations; 3) an after-school partnership with the YMCA; and 4) working with high school principals to assess needs.

Mada Elena, Listos Learning Center, reported on the first quarter results for this new school in the Pearl District, which runs a program to help children, primarily Hispanic, with workplace readiness, job placement, life skills, etc. She said they started with 17 kids and now have 130.

Mayor Katz said the City, in developing its strategy, looked at best practices in Boston, Kansas City and other cities and then shaped its own while at the same time embracing County goals. The efforts of all have helped make possible a reduction in crime rates and this has been done with relatively few dollars, focusing on reorganizing the Police bureau and giving a little money to Commissioner Francesconi to bring in other partners.

Commissioner Francesconi said Portland can more than equal what Boston has achieved because it is offering kids more school and job alternatives. He said he is very pleased with the way this is being integrated and with the relationships that have been formed.

Commissioner Hales said these efforts get much better results when there is an integrated effort. He said he expects kids will figure out that the community has built a better net for them and will notice if it is sustained and not a one-day wonder.

Commissioner Kafoury said what appears to be different about this effort is that at last institutions in the community are not acting in isolation.

Commissioner Sten said this is probably the most important work in the City and County and while it is fairly straight forward, it is hard to keep going week after week. He wants to make sure the resources are there and that the programs continue for, if they do, the numbers will continue to get better. He said this turned out to be much better work than he had anticipated.

Mayor Katz said the City wants to send a message to youth that there is help for them but if they get into trouble and commit serious crimes there are other programs for them as well. She said Portland is one of five cities selected by the Department of Justice to do some research in this area and that research will help them evaluate what they doing and identify other issues to be addressed. She thanked all those involved in this effort, especially the community-based organizations.

Disposition: Accepted. (Y-5)
