Dear City Engineer,

We write to request official application materials to begin a process to rename N Winning Way as "N Ramsay Way" in honor of the esteemed and visionary Jack Ramsay, also known as Dr. Jack, who coached the Portland Trail Blazers to the 1977 National Basketball Association title. Jack Ramsay lived from 1925 to 2014 and continues to inspire basketball players as well as coaches and fans.

As outlined in Portland City Code Chapter 17.93, the first step to initiate Council consideration of a street renaming application is to show that the honoree in a renaming is a real person who has been deceased for five years and has achieved prominence as a result of his or her significant, positive contribution to the United States of America and/or the local community, as well as select a street to be renamed that meets certain characteristics.

We have attached a resolution adopted by the Portland City Council on June 18, 2014. As the full text of the resolution illustrates, Jack Ramsay's contributions to the country and the local community are extraordinary and unique, and a street renaming in his honor is highly appropriate as a result. The resolution also waives the requirement that the honoree be deceased for five years, allowing the City to move more quickly to honor Dr. Jack.

The selection of N Winning Way for renaming meets the requirements outlined in the Code. Specifically, the street, which is home to the Rose Quarter, Moda Center and Veterans Memorial Coliseum, starts and terminates entirely within City boundaries. If renamed, the street will be known as "N Ramsay Way" for its entire length.

We look forward to receiving the official application materials soon so we can continue the renaming process.

Mr. Andre Baugh,
Chair of the Sustainability Commission

Dear Chair Baugh,

This letter reflects the recommendations of the Street Renaming Historian Committee that was convened to consider the renaming of N Winning Way Street to N Ramsay Way, in honor of former Portland Trail Blazers Coach Dr. Jack Ramsay. The renaming is proposed by Portland City Commissioner Steve Novick and the Portland Trail Blazers.

Street Renaming Historian Committee

The Street Renaming Historian Committee members were appointed by City Commissioner Steve Novick and the Portland Trail Blazers. The members of the Committee include: Ms. Ann Schatz, Sports Announcer for the Pac 12 Network; Wayne Thompson, Author of "Blazer Mania, This is our Story" 2010; and Ed Washington, Community Liaison for Diversity Advocacy, Portland State University.

The Committee met on July 22, 2014, and was welcomed by Commissioner Steve Novick. City of Portland staff briefed the Committee on the City's process for renaming a street and provided technical and administrative support to Committee. Below are the Committee's findings:

The legacy and historic significance of Dr. Jack Ramsay

One wouldn't expect to find a basketball coach, even one with a doctorate degree in education from an Ivy League school like Penn, to have a street named after him in Portland, Oregon.

But Dr. Jack Ramsay was no ordinary coach nor ordinary man.

He was Hall of Fame caliber, one of the 10 greatest coaches in pro basketball history, who came to this city in 1976 and won for Portland the National Basketball Association championship.

That the Portland Trailblazers won that title in only its sixth season as a franchise is considered by many to be one of the biggest upsets in NBA history and clearly the greatest single achievement in Oregon's 20th Century sports history.

And arguably the man most responsible for giving Portland this new national market identity -- the chief factor that separated in the national sense a Portland, Oregon from a Portland, Maine -- was Jack Ramsay.

Like sports writers often say when evaluating the value of a player's chemistry to that of the team's, Jack was a good fit for Portland. That is, he was quirky.

He loved the outdoors. He often walked the streets at night after losing games and he was active athletically and physically until his 80s.

One of the top triathletes of his age group, Ramsay survived many of the cancers that attacked his body in later years simply through exercise (50 pushups a day even during his chemo treatments) and mind (crossword puzzles) over less-mannerly therapies to maintain his extra sharp mental acuity.

He liked the fact that Portland, one of his favorite homes away from home, was becoming a bicyclist haven, and a runner's utopia full of nutrition-conscious citizens who don't mind walking in the rain for a daily raisin muffin.

Whether he was coaching in college or the pros, or later behind the microphone on national basketball telecasts, Dr. Jack always referred to what he called his formula for success.

He outlined his approach to coaching in his book, The Coach's Art, co-written with John Strawn:

"What is this game that runs through my mind? It is a ballet, a graceful sweep and flow of patterned movement, counterpointed by daring and imaginative flights of solitary brilliance. It is a dance which begins with opposition contesting every move. But in the exhilaration of a great performance, the opposition vanishes. The dancer does as he pleases. The game is unified action up and down the floor. It is quickness, it is strength, it is skill, it is stamina, it is five men playing as one.....It is winning; it is winning; it is winning!"

Historic context of the area surrounding the proposed N Ramsay Way

N Winning Way was created as part of the development of what is now known as the Rose Quarter, which includes the Veterans Memorial Coliseum and The Moda Center. Prior to the development of the Memorial Coliseum, the neighborhood from 1920 through 1960 was home to the majority of Portland's African American residents and business owners.

After the devastating Kaiser Shipyard Flood in Vanport in 1948, over 18,000 of residents, many of whom were African American, were forced to relocate in the Boise-Elliott Neighborhood and other neighborhoods throughout North Portland. The reestablishment of the African American community helped to root African American cultural centers, businesses, and households in North Portland during this time. However, by the 1960s, thousands of North Portland residents had to again relocate as Interstate 5 and the Memorial Coliseum were developed. As North Portland continued to develop, so did the eastward movement of long-time residents. In light of these developments, North Portland remains the historical cultural center of Portland's African American community to this day.

The Committee also finds it important to recognize the historical significance of the Veterans Memorial Coliseum. Completed in 1960, the Memorial Coliseum was dedicated to the "memory of our veterans of all wars who made the supreme sacrifice." In 2011, the Portland City Council voted to add the word "Veterans" to its name.

Recommendation

In recognizing the historical significance of Dr. Jack Ramsay, the Committee unanimously supports the proposal to rename "N Winning Way" to "N Ramsay Way." Dr. Jack Ramsay is inextricably connected to legacy of the Blazers franchise and to the passion of Rip City fans.

The Committee also asks all Portlanders to remember that the construction of the Veterans Memorial Coliseum displaced the vibrant soul of much of Portland's African American community. Though many of those who lived through that era have either moved or passed away, it is appropriate that they and their contributions to Portland be recognized and celebrated.

It is also appropriate to acknowledge the service and sacrifice of U.S. Military Veterans. Dr. Jack Ramsay, a U.S. Navy veteran himself, thought often of fellow veterans, military service members, and their families. "I feel like I am a part of them," he wrote in a 2011 ESPN column. "And they are still out there now doing great work for this country."

Sincerely,

Ann Schatz, Sports Announcer for the Pac 12 Network
Wayne Thompson, Author of "Blazer Mania, This is our Story" 2010

Dear Mayor Hales and City Council Members:

On August 26, 2014 the Planning and Sustainability Commission (PSC) voted unanimously to recommend to City Council renaming N Winning Way to N Ramsay Way.

The PSC hearing and discussion followed the public meeting held by the Historian Panel appointed by the Commissioner-in-Charge of Transportation, Commissioner Steve Novick. The Historian Panel was charged with determining the appropriateness of the proposed honoree.

The Historian Panel found that Dr. Jack Ramsay is an appropriate person after whom a street may be renamed, determined that the location of N Winning Way was an appropriate context for the renaming, and found that N Winning Way had no historical significance. The Historian Panel did, however, find that it was important to acknowledge and recognize the historical context of the Rose Quarter. The Historian Panel encouraged Portlanders to remember that the construction of the Veteran's Memorial Coliseum displaced a vibrant part of Portland's African American community and to acknowledge the service of U.S. Military Veterans.

In considering the street renaming proposal, the PSC heard a brief presentation from PBOT staff. The presentation and discussion concluded that N Winning Way is an appropriate street to rename in honor of Dr. Jack Ramsay, and that Dr. Jack Ramsay is of historical significance to Portland and more specifically the Rose Quarter that this street may be renamed in his honor.

Renaming a street offers the opportunity for a modern figure to become a part of the inherent structure of the city, acknowledge the impact this person had upon the City, and creates a history for the City. The PSC agrees that renaming N Winning Way to N Ramsay Way is appropriate.

Thank you for your consideration of our recommendation.

Re: Budget Impact Statement related to rename a city street to Ramsay Way

This letter serves as a budget impact statement to the Planning Commission for costs associated with renaming a city street as described in City Code Title 17.93.040. The code states "The City Engineer shall prepare and submit to the Planning Commission a budget impact statement as to the direct cost of production and installation of new street name signs and related City costs."

Background

In June 2014, Commissioner Steve Novick and the Portland Trail Blazers submitted a street renaming application to the City Engineer to rename North Winning Way to North Ramsay Way. The City Engineer accepted this application and as well as a letter of support from 100% of the abutting property owners. The sole property owner being the City of Portland.

The Historian Panel recently held a public meetings taking to discuss the renaming and was available for public comment on the street under consideration and the appropriateness of naming a street for Doctor Jack Ramsay.

The Panel determined that Doctor Jack Ramsay was an appropriate honoree for whom to rename a street.

Cost

The Bureau of Maintenance has provided the following estimated costs for sign replacement for North Winning Way. City code requires that new street signs be installed adjacent to the existing signs for a period of five years at which time the original street signs are to be removed. Included in these costs are sign manufacturing, sign installation, traffic control, and removal of exiting signs five years from the date of the new sign installation.

Next Steps

City Code requires the Planning Commission to hold a public hearing and make a recommendation on the proposed renaming to the City Council. The City Engineer would request that the Planning Commission consider this budget impact statement, the recommendations of the Historian Panel and public testimony at the August 26, 2014 commission hearing and make a recommendation to the City Council.
