There's no way fracked or other gas should be transported through Portland. Snowpack in the Cascades is at extremely low levels in about half the state (11 - 23%). Flowers are coming up at the end of January. San Francisco didn't have rain in January for the first time in 165 years and we all know about the drought CA is suffering through and the resulting wildfires and then landslides they've had. Why when we see these things happening regionally as well as world-wide would you even consider a gas pipeline/terminal?

Sincerely

Juan
