This is equivalent to 68% of the current enrolment for Chapman Elementary, the sole public elementary school serving this area. • During this period, approximately 1,000 2-bedroom housing units were built in the Pearl District, 32% of all housing developed in this district. This is consistent with a shift in the market across the Central City where approximately 27% of the housing units in the last 6 years had 2 or more bedrooms. • Although the Central City has many daycare facilities and a small number of schools, demand consistently outstrips supply. • There is an increased and critical need that these affordable housing provisions are trying to meet. It remains uncertain if the cost of providing these while subsidizing the costs of affordable units can both be met. As such, staff are proposing a strong policy and action framework. 	<input checked="" type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/> Support staff rec. <input type="checkbox"/> Other

Attachment 1: Proposed family compatible housing and services policies and actions

New Policies

Policy 2.7 Family-compatible housing. Encourage the development of housing projects and units that are compatible with the needs of families with children.

Policy 2.8 Family supportive services. Provide and create access to public schools, parks, daycare facilities, playgrounds, community centers, libraries, and other essential services needed to sustain families in the Central City.

New Actions – Listed for reference here. See Action Decision Table.

The North Pearl District Plan (NPDP) and CC2035 Quadrant Plans included a number of objectives addressing the development of housing and essential services that serve the growing number of families with children. To ensure this direction is included in the Adopted Central City 2035 Plan, staff proposes 5 new actions addressing the need for public school facilities, public recreation facilities, and housing that would meet the needs of residents of all ages and income levels, including families with children.

SUBJECT: Attachment for Decision Table P, Attachment 1: Family Compatible Housing and Services

This memorandum contains BPS staff-recommended amendments pertaining to Decision Table P, Proposed family compatible housing and services. This memorandum provides background information and action items.

In 1990, the City of Portland implemented a number of zoning regulations and incentives aimed at increasing the total number of units in the Central City. Development bonus incentives that provided more floor area and height were granted to projects developing residential units. Additionally, residential target areas were established, development agreements were created for specific districts required residential densities to increase over time, and no-net housing loss provisions were adopted.

All of these measures were intended to reverse a four-decade decline in residents in Portland's city center following the loss of tens of thousands of units. These efforts and further zoning amendments in the Pearl, South Waterfront, and West End reversed this tide with over 14,000 units being created and several new neighborhoods that did not exist prior to these initiatives.

In 2008, an effort known as the North Pearl District Plan (NPPD) sought to refine these approaches to increase the diversity of the housing stock. Although the risk to developing housing had been abated, and approximately 30% of all housing was affordable to those earning less than 60% of the regional median family income (MFI), the majority of all housing consisted of studios and 1-bedroom units. These statistics became a concern to city officials and neighborhood advocates as the number of families with children was significantly increasing in the Pearl and other Central City neighborhoods.

For instance, in 2008 Multnomah County records show that 52 children were born to families in the Pearl, while an additional 60 new families with children were created in the other neighborhoods of the Central City.

Thus, the NPDP proposed new development bonuses intended to encourage the development of modest 2- and 3-bedroom units in projects that also included other family-supportive amenities such as indoor and outdoor plays areas and gathering spaces for families. Incentives to create family supportive amenities and services such as play grounds, daycare, public schools, community centers, and libraries were also adopted. In the eight years since these provisions were adopted two projects specifically designed for families have been developed, and the market has shifted such that the majority of new development in the North Pearl now has more 2-bedroom units than before the adoption of the plan.

Specifically, prior to 2008 only about 15% of all housing in the Pearl District consisted of 2-bedroom or larger units; however, between 2009 and 2015, approximately 1,054 2-bedroom units were developed which was 32% of all housing developed. The market outside of the North Pearl also showed an increase in multi-bedroom units. Of the 9,211 housing units built Central City-wide during this same period, approximately 27%, or 2,080 units were 2- and 3-bedroom units.

This trend correlated with an increase in the total number of children born to families in the Central City. Between 2010 and 2015, approximately 407 children (547 children between 2009-2015) were born to families living on west side of the Central City. If all of these children began attendance at Chapman Elementary, the sole public elementary school serving the west side of the Central City, these students would constitute approximately 68% of the school's total current attendance of 600 students.

To ensure more family compatible housing is developed through the life of the CC2035 Plan, BPS proposes the new policies and action items presented in Table P, Attachment 1.
