More dirt trails for hiking and biking and off-road cycling parks are being planned for Portland

Portlanders, we love our nature, right? It's one of the things that makes our city so special. That's why the City of Portland is looking for ways to increase off-road cycling facilities throughout the city – so more people can be active outside, experience nature and their city, and enjoy riding a bicycle.

Through the Off-road Cycling Master Plan, you can be a part of the decision-making process ... about what kinds of trails, pump tracks and skill parks should go where. We're particularly interested in creating more opportunities for people and families in underserved areas.

What do you think?

We want to hear from you! Whether you like to walk, bike, run, experience nature, or enjoy Portland's parks and open spaces in other ways, your input will help create a more complete "system" of dirt trails and other facilities throughout the city.

Family bike parks? Safe trails? Where should they go in your neighborhood?

The Off-road Cycling Plan needs your input to help decide where to recommend future off-road cycling trails and bicycle parks. We want to hear from as many Portlanders as possible.

Can you spare some park space for bicycle parks in your neighborhood? Can you spare some natural area for a pump track or skill park? Do you have suggestions for new recreational facilities and/or trails? Let us know what you think!

COMMUNITY EVENTS

Bring your family to go on the trail. Experience a bike or bring your own and try out all the trails. We've got ideas on opportunities in your neighborhood and ask questions about the plan. Help us build and shape the trail!
