regulations and standards for the River General (g*), River Recreational (r*) and River Environmental (e) overlay zones. These regulations include an increased river setback, landscaping requirements, a residential dock standard, a limited retail allowance to serve recreation uses at three park sites, archaeological resources protections, increased tree replacement ratios, the establishment of a new riparian buffer area and updated standards for temporary structures in the river. All development activities that are not able to meet standards, or for which there are no standards, must be approved through River Review.

Revisions to the Scenic overlays in the Central City are also proposed as a part of the River Plan/South Reach. The Scenic overlay (s) zone is being added to some Central City properties and will include new requirements for viewpoint amenities, such as a bench or lighting, on certain zoning code mapped properties. Updates to the River Overlay Zones chapter that affect Central City properties include increased tree replacement ratios, updated floodplain requirements, and revised standards for landscaping and the placement of temporary structures in the river.

An update to the Willamette River Greenway Inventory is also included in the adopting ordinance. The Willamette River Greenway Inventory is a background existing conditions inventory that is periodically updated to continue compliance with Statewide Planning Goal 15. Updates included the addition of new zones from Bureau of Planning and Sustainability projects since the last update in 2014 and minor updates to codes used to identify historic resources. Updates that were a part of the River Plan / South Reach have also been incorporated.
