

COMMUNIST ADS BARRED BY CITY

Communists may talk but they cannot advertise in the city, the council decided yesterday when it turned down an application for an advertising car for the Multnomah committee of the communist party to gather a crowd at Viking park September 4, when William Z. Foster, national chairman, and Earl Browder, executive secretary, will speak.

Commissioner Ormond R. Bean was perfectly willing for the communists to talk, but he felt they could do their advertising in other ways than by a car through the city streets. Clayton Van Lydegraf, chairman of the picnic committee at Viking park, asked for the permit and put up the $10 fee, which will be rebated.

They Don't Bite the Hand

To the Editor: John Frey, hating the C. I. O. and everything connected with it, has raised the cry of communism against the Workers' Alliance because it has an agreement with the C. I. O.

WPA workers and relief clients do not bite the hand that feeds them, therefore within the Workers' Alliance we find Hess-for-Governor clubs and many officials who are democratic precinct committeemen, but do not find any rugged individualists in support of Sprague and Hoover, nor do we find any communist cells.

To raise the cry of communism against one's political opponents is an ancient ruse which seems to improve with use or at least never grow old. Mayor Carson used it against the opponents of Martin, but it didn't work, and John Frey will be no more successful against the C. I. O. and its affiliates.
