Permanent, safe, secure... Those are things that when you're homeless sound unattainable. Being in permanent housing changes the narrative for us.

Portland's living room invites you to come together at 5:30pm Friday for Santa Claus, hot cocoa, and a joyful holiday sing-along! The 40th Annual Tree Lighting Ceremony at Pioneer Courthouse Square will feature Portland's own Thomas Lauderdale, China Forbes, Storm Large, and Pink Martini with special guests including Cantor Ida Rae Cahana, Jacob and Jayden Van, Albina Music Trust Time Sound Gospel Choir, Royal Blues of Grant High School, Gresham High School Overtones, Barlow Sound of Sam Barlow High School, and alumni of the Pacific Youth Choir. This community tradition is the shiny highlight of the holiday season in downtown. Santa Claus will "flip the switch" to illuminate more than 9,500 colorful LED lights on a 75-foot Douglas fir donated by Stimson Lumber Company for all to enjoy throughout the holiday season.

It's worth giving people a shot because you never know if this is going to be what they needed to get them back on their feet.

Yesterday I participated in a panel discussion about "Big Ideas to Streamline Permitting" at the 2024 Cascadia Innovation Corridor Conference. The gathering brought together elected officials, business leaders, developers, housing advocates, and other stakeholders from Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia to discuss how we can work together to create sufficient housing supply now and in the future to address our affordable housing crisis.

Last week City Council proudly passed a resolution in support of renaming Southwest Jackson Street, between Fifth and Park avenues, to Southwest Rose Hill Street. Rose Hill is a Cultural Keeper and former Native American Student & Community Center Student Coordinator who serves as a Cultural Advisor at the Native American Rehabilitation Association in Portland. Renaming this street after her is a wonderful and fitting tribute for the legacy of advocacy, mentorship, leadership, and love she has shared with our city and community.

Yesterday Portland City Council approved legislation I championed to establish six new Tax Incremental Finance (TIF) districts that will bring in more than $2.5 billion over the next 30 years to spur economic growth, create jobs, and invest in a range of housing options in both the Central City and East Portland. This was a huge undertaking at a moment in Portland's history that demanded swift, bold action. These new TIF districts will help us realize our vision of prosperous, thriving communities in East Portland and a revitalized Central City. This plan creates a new, substantial source of public investments dedicated to advancing that work and ushering in a new chapter for our Central City – and it does so without raising taxes for our residents or businesses. Learn more at portland.gov/rubio/news.

Anyone can get breast cancer. It doesn't matter who you are, what language you speak, or your income level. In fact, more than 360,000 people across our country will be diagnosed this year. And in the Pacific Northwest, our rate of diagnoses are unfortunately above the national average. But when caught in its earliest, localized stages, the survival rate is very encouraging. That is why City Council passed a proclamation yesterday for Breast Cancer Awareness Month. I want to give a big appreciation to the Pink Lemonade Project as well as the OHSU Knight Cancer Institute for all you are doing to educate community and eradicate breast cancer. Let's keep spreading this awareness - and I look forward to the day that we will be done with this devastating disease.

This week Portland Community College invited me to speak with older teens and adults who are working to complete their GED. Amy Boehnke says her course explores how to understand identity and empathy to create a more just and equitable democracy. It was a great opportunity to help students better understand city politics, government structure, and how everyday people can get involved and create change through civic engagement.

Portland City Council today formally proclaimed Latinx Heritage Month – a time when we lift up the diverse cultures that make up the Latine community, and the experiences that educate, inform, and inspire us. I especially want to acknowledge the ongoing contributions of Latine community and civic leaders who are working hard to create opportunity, support higher education, and prepare emerging leaders to achieve their dreams and make their own unique contributions to our City and our economy – while building generational wealth for their families.

Last night I served on a panel to close Portland Sustainable Building Week with a robust discussion about housing, sustainability, and climate policy. I shared progress we're making thanks to the Portland Clean Energy Community Benefits Fund. With these resources, the City can now help raise the bar on efficiency and renewable energy upgrades in new and renovated affordable housing projects serving low-income and other frontline communities, thereby helping address both the housing crisis AND the climate crisis at the same time.

What is this a parking ticket? Nope clearly it's sexism at work. What's that...a hit and run? Try again sexism! License suspended again...hah slides sexism card to reporter Sorry, your 150 tickets and other driving mishaps having nothing to do with you being a woman. It has everything to do with you trying to get into a position of power while not taking laws seriously and then taking no accountability.

Why don't you volunteer at the @blanchethouse I'm sure they would love to have someone so prominent in the community helping to serve meals to the public. I'm sure they could pencil you in for anyone of their 3 meal services Monday through Saturday. Speak with Duke, who's on staff there. I'm sure you'd find the conversation illuminating. You are aware we have a large, suffering homeless population, right? Go volunteer, ask questions. Give back in a meaningful way. Help them.

Today I had the opportunity to meet with small-business owners and folks who support our local entrepreneurs. Thank you to Better Portland Executive Director Stephen Green for convening this incredibly important group of people and for being such a great advocate for their voices. I heard about the need to make sure we are focusing on hospitality and on hiring champions in key City positions who can represent the needs of small-business owners and startups. Importantly, we discussed how the City can support businesses through challenging months for commercial activity. I will continue to champion small businesses, the backbone of our local economy.

Happy Labor Day! Portland NEEDS good union jobs if we want to bounce back – where workers are respected, earn a fair wage, and have health care they can afford. Good union jobs promote stability, worker retention, and long-term economic health. When it comes to fighting for benefits and on-the-job safety, I will always have your back!

August is National Black Business Month, a yearly celebration that recognizes and supports the contributions of Black-owned businesses and entrepreneurs to our economy, diversity, and innovation. The month was created in 2004 by San Francisco-based Black business executives, historian John William Templeton, and engineer Fredrick E. Jordan. As the City Commissioner responsible for community and economic development, I have proudly supported initiatives to realize a city where no matter who you are, you can thrive here. I am especially excited that we are finally seeding the Small Business Office and that we will start showing up for our small businesses in a way that the City has not done before. Black-owned businesses in the United States generate more than $217 BILLION in revenue annually and support more than 3.56 MILLION jobs, even though they only account for 7% of all businesses. They are also a testament to the country's ongoing progress toward diversity and equality.

Today it was announced that Kimberly Branam is leaving Prosper Portland, the City's economic development agency, to take a leadership role at the Port of Portland. During Kimberly's 8 years as Executive Director, Prosper Portland was rebranded to better reflect its work and aspirations. Her team developed Advance Portland, a 5-year plan for inclusive growth through interventions that advance competitiveness, racial equity, and climate action. And they're already delivering results: supporting business retention and growth with expanded incentives; investing in catalytic events; establishing a new Office of Small Business; and developing the next generation of Tax Increment Finance districts for City Council consideration this fall. Kimberly also led the way in developing and implementing equitable growth interventions like the Inclusive Business Resource Network, Portland Means Progress, and the Neighborhood Prosperity Districts; advancing transformative projects like Broadway Corridor, OMSI, Williams & Russell, and Lents Town Center; and deploying millions in emergency, repair, and restore grants to thousands of small businesses. Please join me in thanking Kimberly for her game-changing leadership!

POLITICS AND POLICY

City Council to consider strategies to stimulate new housing production

The Housing Production Strategy is a five-year action plan for meeting the community's current and future housing needs, emphasizing equitable and affordable options.

Portland.gov/Housing-Production

THE BUREAU OF
SUSTAINABILITY

Over the next 20 years, Portland will need up to 120,000 new housing units, including a variety of housing types (family-sized, affordable, accessible/visitable) for current and future households. To help meet that need, I directed the Bureau of Planning and Sustainability (BPS) to work with a variety of City staff and external stakeholders, conducting in-depth analyses and engagement to determine more exact housing needs in Portland. The result is the City's inaugural draft Housing Production Strategy, which builds on initiatives led by my office since I was assigned the Community & Economic Development Service Area in early 2023. The Housing Production Strategy is a five-year action plan, including strategies and actions the City can take to promote new housing development, emphasizing equitable outcomes for communities facing bigger challenges to meeting their housing needs - especially low-income households, communities of color, elders, people with disabilities, and people experiencing houselessness. Of particular note is the City's commitment to ensure that housing is a key component in major redevelopment projects such as Albina Vision Trust, OMSI, Lloyd, and 82nd Avenue. In addition, the City will be looking at further ways to incentivize office-to-housing conversions in downtown and analyzing density and height across the Central City. City Council will discuss the proposal at a public hearing at 2pm Wednesday, August 28th, where community members are invited to testify. Read more about the project at Portland.gov/Housing-Production.

So, the proposal is for a plan to draft a draft strategy for what in depth analyses can determine what would be the equitable outcomes of a housing plan in the Community Economic Development Area?

This morning City Council was joined by a delegation from the Japanese Local Governance and Management Training Program. Since 2004, the program has introduced hundreds of public employees, legislators, and nonprofit managers to Portland's tradition of community involvement and innovation in public and private projects. This year, Portland State University's Hatfield School of Government Center for Public Service hosted 12 participants who were eager to see how our city responds to critical challenges and how leaders balance a long-term mission – ensuring a successful charter transition – with multiple short-term priorities.

Last night I helped kick off a panel discussion to “Erase the Gap” by addressing deep inequities within the pay-to-play U.S. youth soccer system. The conversation included Tiffani Penson of the City of Portland’s “We Are Better Together” outreach team and Kaig Lightner of the Portland Community Football Club, which provides high-quality, affordable club soccer to low-income, immigrant, refugee, and LGBTQ+ youth. The club’s Liberate Sports campaign aims to create solutions beyond the scholarship model, which reinforces existing racial, gender, and economic inequities.

Today I attended a gathering with our Black community leaders regarding the recent shooting events at Dawson Park. It was clear to me that, while gun violence is reducing across the city, we need to take additional action. One of the first major items I passed in Council invested millions in gun violence prevention and intervention efforts. It is a priority of mine to see those continue. I have also been working with Mayor Wheeler to consider additional, prompt actions such as targeted traffic calming methods around the park; increased police presence through a community policing model that works with community on shared expectations; and further fee reductions for event activation. We have to step in and support the work that our city and community are already doing together, and ensure a safe place for all to gather.

I am glad you attended as I met with these leaders and the Problem Solvers Network in my City of Portland role and collaboration with the Mayor's office and Anne Hill, Director of Public Environment Management Office. There are 14 Problem Solver areas that meet every two weeks to address community challenges in a comprehensive, creative and timely manner, maintaining a strong sense of urgency and accountability. We have a meeting that is specifically dedicated to address issues on Stanton Street and Dawson Park that have been taking place for 18 months delivering on requests by neighbors and community members that frequent the area and the park. These leaders have committed to making sure that they attend this meeting every two weeks to bring forth concerns and issues that need to be addressed. We have Mayor's office staff, PEMO team, Safe Blocks, and a dedicated Police officer, that are present delivering on request. This model is efficient and designed to cut through the beaucratic red tape to address the acute needs of the community. If any one is interested in attending these 30 minute online meetings to state your request for your district please contact pemo@portlandoregon.gov

Today is Portland Neighborhood Emergency Teams Day in recognition of the 1,200-plus active volunteers who give their time and efforts to more than 50 different teams throughout the city. Thank you for caring for our neighbors, and for all you do to keep our community safe! Working together, especially in the most difficult of situations, is what this program is all about. I am so impressed with its strong network and commitment to this city's safety and preparedness. In our worst and most stressful moments, NET volunteers are there. They are the quiet superheroes we may not see every day, but are the first leaders to step up for their neighbors during moments of crisis. NET reminds us that we are a better city when we are better prepared. I encourage Portlanders of all ages to consider joining their Neighborhood Emergency Team. Learn more at portland.gov/pbem/neighborhood-emergency-teams.

"I thank God every day," says Rochelle, "because if it wasn't for [Bond-funded project] Crescent Court, I know I would still be homeless on the street."

Portlanders made a long-term, generational investment by voting for the 2016 Housing Bond. In the newly released 2023 Portland Housing Bond Progress Report, you will learn about individual projects, and you will hear from staff working hard to serve residents and from residents whose lives have been dramatically impacted. For more information go to portland.gov/phb/news.

For nearly 20 years, Travel Portland President and CEO Jeff Miller has served as the ultimate Portland ambassador. He deeply knows the City of Roses and has reflected our values to the rest of the world through his work. Jeff is a strong manager who has built a stellar, high-performing team that promotes the best of Portland. I'm especially impressed with his leadership in navigating a post-COVID world for our travel and leisure industry. Please join me in wishing Jeff a happy and well-deserved retirement!

This week I met with the Afghan Support Network, the first culturally specific nonprofit organization that has been formed to target the needs of Afghan refugees and the Afghan-American community in the greater Portland area. They are seeking an office/community gathering space for 4-6 months; if anyone has a lead, please reach out to my office!

The City of Portland is co-sponsoring this year's Juneteenth Parade, which will kick off at 11am Saturday from Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Elementary School. For more information visit JuneteenthOR.com. Juneteenth, which will be formally observed on June 19th, is an important day of reflection – but it also must be a day to commit to tangible action. And it starts with us here at the City – valuing and seeing Black employees and recognizing their experiences and contributions. We can recommit to doing this every day while advancing work that is community-led; lifting up the importance of accountability to our past; and supporting the self-determination, liberation, and contributions of Black people and communities everywhere.

Yesterday I congratulated the graduates of Leadership Portland, a civic engagement program offered by Portland Metro Chamber to empower tomorrow's leaders for Portland's future. As a 2011 graduate, Leadership Portland came at just the right time in my career, helping to expand my networks in the business community, government, and other nonprofits. This program was invaluable in introducing me to people I would have never met otherwise, and several I work with regularly today.

The Portland Rose Festival always brings an infusion of creative energy for the downtown small businesses that keep our city the vibrant, diverse place we all love to shop, play, and live. Coinciding with the CareOregon Starlight Parade on Saturday evening, you can show your support this weekend by stopping into participating businesses and entering to win an amazing prize pool just by saying hi - and making purchases increases your odds of winning! To participate, download the Win Big Shop Small app at RoseFestival.org/StarryNights.

The Portland Rose Festival starts today in Waterfront Park with the CityFair ribbon cutting at 5pm and fireworks at 9:50pm! This time-honored tradition showcases all the best parts of our great city in so many fun and vibrant ways. I consider the Rose Festival to be an unofficial kickoff to the summer events season, and I look forward to it every year. It celebrates art, nature, the creativity of Portlanders, our incredible small businesses – and our appreciation for an opportunity to gather and have fun. The Rose Festival truly has something for everyone, so I encourage you to bring your friends and family to experience the joy of our city. For discount advance tickets, go to RoseFestival.org.

Since 1870, 29 Portland Police officers and two police canines have been killed in the line of duty. Yesterday the Portland Police Bureau held a memorial ceremony in recognition of our local law enforcement officers who have lost their lives for the safety and protection of others. Their sacrifices will never be forgotten.

You had to go as far back as EIGHTEEN-SEVENTY. Oregon governor in the 1940s was openly spouting anti-Japanese racist nonsense, and it's AAPI month - do you care about ANY of those families that had their livelihoods stolen from them? That's what cops do, and you're a flthy politician that doesn't serve her constituents. SHAMEFUL. YOU NEED US MORE THAN WE NEED YOU.

I am thrilled by Daimler Truck North America's decision to invest significant resources and continue to lead heavy-duty vehicle technology right here in Portland. I want to acknowledge and thank Governor Tina Kotek for her commitment to this effort and to building the clean economy. I also want to recognize the Prosper Portland Board, Kimberly Branam, and the outstanding team at Prosper Portland that has worked closely with DTNA for many years. Portland is where Freightliner Trucks was founded more than 80 years ago, DTNA is an anchor employer in our city, and today's announcement is a proud moment for all involved. The future of heavy-duty vehicle technology in Portland is very bright – and very green. Read more at prosperportland.us/news-events.

None of this would have been possible without the Portland Clean Energy Fund: • PCEF freed up a whopping $38.4 million in General Fund dollars that will largely support public safety investments – making this budget the largest investment in public safety in the city’s history. • In addition, PCEF will invest $219 million for climate work across city bureaus for the next fiscal year. • PCEF will also invest more than $600 million for climate work across city bureaus over the next 5 years. This week I joined several private and public sector entities in Washington, D.C., to discuss City of Portland priorities with our federal agencies and representatives. As the City Commissioner responsible for community and economic development, my main focuses were housing production and support to our small businesses. I asked the U.S. Small Business Administration for resources to deal with the ever-rising costs of produce, the overcharging of credit card fees, and how they can help increase the production of housing by making key investments in our city.

Today is Blackfish Gallery Day! This afternoon City Council passed a proclamation I co-sponsored to honor this iconic Portland arts organization, which has represented more than 150 diverse Oregon and Washington artists since its beginning. Blackfish has always been on the cutting edge of the Pacific Northwest's art scene. In fact, it was one of the first galleries to establish itself in the neighborhood that would eventually be the Pearl District, which is now home to so many artistic endeavors and considered one of this city's first arts and culture hubs. I appreciate that Blackfish has been at the forefront of exhibitions and events with inclusively bold and representative themes to reach a broader and more diverse audience that truly reflects Portland today. Congratulations for shaping generations of Portlanders by encouraging us – through art – to constantly challenge ourselves and our boundaries to think about art, culture, and community differently. Please go to Blackfish.com/45anniversary to join the celebration!

Portland schools could see $50 million boost for climate action

It's critical to ensure that our schools are healthy places for our kids to learn free of mold, exposure to extreme heat, wildfire, smoke, and so many more issues created or exacerbated by the climate crisis. With the schools controlling such significant assets across our community, our investment presents a wonderful opportunity to make impactful emissions reductions meaningfully, reduce utility costs, and serve those who will inherit this place after us. Read more at OPB.org.

The U.S. Small Business Administration is celebrating #SmallBusinessWeek through May 4th! Earlier this month I had a great meeting with Sarah Shaoul, founder of Bricks Need Mortar, which supports our small, independent businesses – particularly those that are disenfranchised and marginalized – through these challenging times. I'm looking forward to hitting the streets with her soon to meet more business owners!

Nearly every day we see proof that we are living in a climate emergency. Human-caused climate change is making our weather more erratic and unpredictable: Over the past several years, Portlanders have increasingly experienced record-shattering heat, choking smoke from increasing wildfires, more frequent floods, and other extreme climate events. Scientists also recently published a warning that the next five summers will be the hottest on record. In fact, Earth is likely to pass 1.5 degrees Celsius of warming over pre-industrial levels, a key climate threshold, by 2027. Portland has long been an international leader in sustainability and climate justice. On this #EarthDay, let's recommit to building a sustainable and climate-resilient city for future generations – especially those impacted first and disproportionately.

Every year, billions of birds migrate north during the springtime. Bright artificial lights can cause birds to become disoriented, with increased risks of running into buildings and windows. Lights Out Portland Month, which continues through May 19th, works to protect our wildlife from urban threats. During this time, Portlanders are encouraged to reduce all unnecessary exterior lighting. City facilities are participating by turning off unnecessary outdoor lighting and encouraging staff to close blinds and turn off lights when they leave for the day. The city is also making additional strides in addressing lighting issues. The Bureau of Planning and Sustainability is working toward recommendations to address light pollution outlined in the 2020 Dark Skies Report. In addition, the Portland Bureau of Transportation has established new lighting standards that are better aligned with Illuminating Engineering Society and DarkSky International's dark sky standards; these include warmer color temperature lights and a focus on dark sky compliant fixtures. Today Portland City Council proclaimed this week to be Public Safety Telecommunicators Appreciation Week, honoring one of the most vital parts of our community safety ecosystem. During moments of crisis, we often hear about the brave people who respond to emergencies - firefighters, police officers, paramedics. But it all starts with these equally brave and steadfast telecommunicators who are the first point of contact for so many experiencing possibly the worst moments of their lives. I especially want to appreciate the tremendous responsibilities of their job: the heavy emotional work that requires consistently providing reassurance, empathy, and calmness to the caller on the other end of the line. This is a unique, special skill. We are all so thankful for their dedication, effort, and behind-the-scenes service on the frontline of the toughest situations.

Yesterday I was honored to congratulate several new officers at their swearing-in ceremony. With their service, we are continuing to build a 21st century Portland Police Bureau that puts community safety at the center. I'm committed to ensuring that the bureau has the tools and infrastructure support it needs to recruit, hire, and retain police officers. Filling all vacancies is critical to maintaining its service levels.

This morning I spoke with Univision's Guillermo Motta about a heartbreaking situation involving asylum seekers who are struggling to find lodging in Portland. It's simply unacceptable that these families have been forced to navigate this on their own, and I want to thank the community organizations that have stepped in to fill this void, including the Portland Housing Bureau. As soon as I learned about this issue, my office met with the Interfaith Movement for Immigrant Justice to find out how we could help. I'm relieved to know that Multnomah County has found funding to extend their lodging through the end of this month and that the State of Oregon's Office of Immigrant and Refugee Advancement is working on a long-term solution.

I'm honored to be this week's guest on Her Own Wings, the only podcast featuring Oregon women in government leadership. A collaboration with the League of Oregon Cities Women's Caucus, the show aims to highlight women in elected leadership and encourage more women to seek elective office or careers in city government. Check it out at ORcities.org/about/who-we-are/loc-womens-caucus/her-own-wings-podcast!
