What a joyous day for Portland Pride!
I was honored to march again with Cascade AIDS Project, and it was wonderful to see such a strong turnout. I'll continue working to ensure Portland remains a place where everyone feels safe to express their full selves everywhere they go.

Homeownership remains one of the most reliable ways of building wealth, establishing economic security, and strengthening social ties to a community. However, it is a privilege that is out of reach for many for a host of reasons, including historic racial and economic exclusion.

Last week @homeforwardnews invited me to speak at the @CLPHA Conference to provide an update about how my office has responded to the housing crisis by working to identify every lever we can pull at the local level to help increase housing production despite market challenges. <https://t.co/cTBuJpcioS>

I am thrilled to report that Portland's first-ever Housing Bond, which voters passed in 2016, is funding more family-size homes, more units of Permanent Supportive Housing, and more deeply affordable homes than initially promised.

It was great to see so many City staff connecting with the community at Sunday Parkways in Northeast Cully! Be sure to mark your calendar for Portland Bureau of Transportation's final route of the season on September 22nd in Southwest Portland. <https://t.co/iwmvGwDRLO>

Having regulations that are clear, simple, and easy to implement ensures Portland is a good partner to the development community – while helping to increase housing production and support small businesses. It's simply good governance. <https://t.co/XclReqS29D>

This week I met with Afghan Support Network, the first culturally specific nonprofit organization that targets the needs of Afghan refugees and the Afghan-American community around Portland. They are seeking a gathering space; if anyone has a lead, please reach out to my office! <https://t.co/8GrW6UPmfU>
