This morning I was interviewed by fifth-graders at Rigler, a bilingual school where 50%+ of students are English Language Learners from Spanish-speaking homes. Thanks to Justin Godoy for welcoming me into your classroom to discuss how bilingual education can expand kids' dreams! <https://t.co/6aa9R0yHuf>

Bolder action is needed to help Portland recover – in balance with maintaining the services people rely on every day. Incentivizing office lease renewals can help our most distressed areas and help surrounding businesses with increased foot traffic. <https://t.co/I14FPRfLou>

Yesterday I was thrilled to celebrate Francis + Clare Place, which is rooted in a simple idea: You can't get well if you're not housed. In a little over a year, this site will be home to more than 60 Portlanders, moved in off the streets, and getting a second chance to get well.

Thanks to Permanent Supportive Housing, all of the residents will receive stabilizing services that will help them address any substance use or mental health issues they may be facing, not to mention more basic barriers like documentation, employment, and technology access.

Portland: We must do more and better. We need to double down on our commitment to racial justice and interrupt racism in all forms and at its root – whether in our neighborhoods or in our institutions.
