Everyone deserves to feel welcomed/belonging, & encounter a Portland free of racial bias/hate—especially children. Crimes like this are clear indicators of where our work/focus needs to be & why local governments working together to address shared community issues is important.

Commissioner Carmen Rubio
City of Portland

Dear Mayor Ayers-Flood,

As Portland's Parks and Recreation Commissioner, I congratulate you on the recent opening of your yet-to-be-named small park. Big or small, parks are foundational to any city, anchoring neighborhoods and providing space for community-building.

In Portland, our own Mill Ends Park – the world's smallest park since 1971 – is a tremendous asset in our system. A noted leprechaun sanctuary, Mill Ends is a destination for Portlanders and visitors alike. Parkgoers often post photos or write positively about their time in the park, and it maintains a near-perfect rating on Yelprechaun. Reviewers particularly praise the park's native vegetation, which is carefully selected by Parks horticulturalists and tended by Parks technicians.

If parkgoers get too hot, they can enjoy one of the park's shaded benches (provided they are under five inches), or they can cross the newly-improved Naito Parkway – taking care to not get run over by the many bikes – for a dip in the Willamette River. If they get hungry, parkgoers can walk just a few blocks and enjoy one of Portland's iconic food trucks, where just one item will feed the entire family – a family of leprechauns.

As you can see, Mill Ends is beloved by Portlanders of all ages.

But managing small parks poses distinct challenges. I'm not sure whether you, like Portland, will be making the space available for leprechauns, elves, sprites, or other magical creatures, but I would caution that you will need both more space and vegetation. Without these, and with southern Oregon's heat, you will certainly get poor reviews on Yelprechaun.

Atentamente,

Commissioner Carmen Rubio

Seattle is moving ahead with a "safe parking" site for those living in RVs or cars. In contrast, Portland officials are doing nothing about a proposal for safe parking at Expo Center. www.week.com/news/city/2022...

@CommRubio @PDXParksandRec
@aaronnigelsmith Please keep LAURELHURST Park clean.
Campers continue right along the recreation area. You know, where CHILDREN would play.
Don't EVER expect another parks bill to pass with such a dereliction of duty.
