Newly appointed Portland Commission on Disability Commissioner bios:

Dana Coffee received a Bachelor's degree in French and a Certificate in Black Studies from Portland State University. Following a career in the technology industry, Dana is currently working on a Certificate in Fundraising for Non-profits from PSU. She volunteers at The Shadow Project, a non-profit dedicated to improving Oregon Special Education classrooms and for Portland Social Venture Partners whose mission is to help non-profits thrive. A business development specialization in the technology industry brought her opportunities to volunteer with the Technology Association of Oregon and to co-found a non-profit dedicated to education and building community, Portland Storage Network Users Group. She has worked closely with the City of Portland, successfully completing various technology projects with a number of city bureaus. Dana's passionate advocacy for the disabled stems from lived experience with family members diagnosed with autism and mental illness.

Andrea Olson, M.S., CRC, ADAC, has a marketing degree from University of Oregon and a rehabilitation counseling Master's degree from Western Oregon University. She is a Certified Rehabilitation Counselor (CRC) and Certified ADA Coordinator (ADAC) with extensive work experience as a disability management educator, vocational case manager in private sector workers' compensation, and reasonable accommodation coordinator in the federal sector. She received national recognition for a best practices case study featured in the Computer/Electronics Accommodation Program (CAP) federal government webinar, 'Telework as a Form of Reasonable Accommodation'.
